Introduction

The purpose of this supplement is to point out preferences adopted by the DTS Thesis Style Committee where Turabian gives options, and to add information peculiar to DTS research projects not otherwise addressed in Turabian. Turabian is very thorough in its treatment of most issues involving form and style and is rather easy to use if one takes the time to read the fifteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth chapters and consults the very complete Index of topics in the back. Turabian, along with this supplement, should address most of the questions students will have regarding form and style relative to writing research papers, theses, and dissertations.

In addition to following this supplement, the student is encouraged to use the research paper and thesis templates that are available for download from https://library.dts.edu/turabian. With the use of these tools, many of the style requirements specified here (e.g., margins, spacing) are fulfilled automatically.

Most doctoral degree programs have additional supplements. Contact the administrative assistant for your degree program to obtain these important supplements. Those degree-specific guidelines amend this document.

Parts of the Thesis

Order of the Front Mater

Change the order of the “Front Matter” (Turabian A.2.1) for a thesis or dissertation as follows, omitting parts that are not applicable.

Title Page
Acceptance Sheet
Abstract
Contents
Illustrations
Tables
Abbreviations
Acknowledgements
Preface

Title Page

See Appendix B for an example. The author’s full name should be used on the title page. Examples of acceptable forms are Lewis Sperry Chafer, John F. Walvoord, and S. Lewis
Johnson Jr. The author’s name must not be concealed in any fashion and pseudonyms must not be used. Greek and Hebrew words should be transliterated in the title. The date on the title page of theses and dissertations should be the month of graduation and the year (without a comma between them), not the date when the final draft was submitted. However, if the thesis is written after graduation, use the date of writing.

Acceptance Page

Abstract

Abstracts are required for all theses and dissertations. This page should have the heading “ABSTRACT” and include the full title of the dissertation, the author’s name, and the full names of the readers, with either their first name and middle initial or first initial and middle name. Do not include personal titles such as “Dr.” The abstract should function as a “stand alone” document which includes a statement of the problem, a brief exposition of the main lines of argument, and the conclusion. The abstract must not exceed 350 words. See Appendix E for an example.

Contents

For the table of contents, see the instructions in Turabian A.2.1.6 and the example in Appendix D of this supplement. Use headline style of capitalization (Turabian 22.3.1). Parts are not necessary.

Abbreviations

Theses and dissertations (but not research papers) should include a complete list of the abbreviations used. Follow the example on Turabian, p. 387.

Format of the Thesis

All of the formatting conventions adopted by DTS have been saved as settings in the thesis and term paper templates, which the student is encouraged to use. They can be accessed from the DTS Library website: https://library.dts.edu/turabian. However, the student must adhere to the following conventions even if those tools are not used.
Margins

Leave a margin of one inch on the top, bottom, and right side and one and a half inch (for binding purposes) on the left side for all theses and dissertations. Leave a margin of one inch on all sides for research papers.

Typeface

Use twelve-point type for the body of the text and ten-point type for footnotes.

Spacing and Indentation

All theses should be double-spaced. Indent the beginning of paragraphs and footnotes ¾ inches and block quotations ½ inches. Paragraph indentation for block quotation should be another ¼ inches if you are quoting from the beginning of the paragraph.

For pages that begin a chapter, leave two inches between the top of the page and the chapter heading. See the example provided in Appendix E.

Pagination

All pages within the front matter should be numbered, except the title page (although it is counted as page i). The page numbers for front matter sections should be lowercase, Roman numerals that are centered at the bottom of the page.

For the body of the paper, use Arabic numerals and place them at the top right-hand side for pages that do not begin a new chapter. For pages that do begin a new chapter, center the page number at the bottom.

Subheadings

With regard to subheadings as discussed in Turabian A.2.2.4, use the following options:

| Level 1 | Centered, boldface |
| Level 2 | Centered, roman type |
| Level 3 | Flush left, boldface |
| Level 4 | Flush left, roman type |
| Level 5 | Run in at beginning of paragraph, boldface |

All five levels may not be necessary for most research papers, and any combination of levels may be used as long as they adhere to the order above.
Subheadings are started on the 3rd line after the preceding text (double space plus one line), while normal text begins on 2nd line after the heading.

Citing Sources

Plagiarism

Guard against plagiarism. Please read Turabian 4.2.3, 7.9 and section 1:16:3 of the Student Handbook carefully.

Quotations

Note the distinction between block quotations and run-in quotations in Turabian 25.2.1 and 25.2.2. Specifically note that a block quotation must be five lines or more and single-spaced.

Biblical Citations

See Turabian 17.8.2 and 24.6 for referring to biblical passages, but cite biblical passages parenthetically rather than in footnotes. Also use the standard SBL abbreviations, given below, instead of the ones given in Turabian 24.6.

Footnotes

Study chapters 15-17 carefully concerning the need and proper method for citing sources. Chapter 15 provides general principles; chapter 16 describes the Notes-Bibliography style that DTS has adopted for most sources; and chapter 17 gives more detailed guidance on specific types of sources that the student will likely encounter.

Of the two citation options specified by Turabian (Notes Style and Author-Date Style), DTS requires the Notes Style with footnotes rather than endnotes (T 15.3.1 and T 16) for all sources except biblical and classical citations. A bibliography of cited sources is included at the end of the paper (T 16.2) and should be arranged alphabetically in accordance with T 16.2.2.

See Turabian 16.3.4 for properly formatting footnotes, but note that DTS requires superscripts for note numbers rather than regular text. Pay special attention to Turabian 16.3.3, which states that footnotes must start over with 1 for each new chapter.

Subsequent notes within the same chapter should be shortened by the author-title method; see Turabian 16.4.1 for examples. Furthermore, for repeating a citation that has just been used in a previous note, use the author-title method of shortening rather than the increasingly obsolete abbreviation ibid. Note, however, that the first reference to a work within a new chapter should be a full reference.
Although Turabian allows but does not require the inclusion of series information in footnotes and bibliographic entries, the series title and volume number (if available) are important and should be included; the series editor’s name is optional, however.

Electronic Sources

Pay special attention to T 15.4.1.2, which describes the two categories of electronic sources: those that are like print in every respect except the electronic format, e.g., e-books, journals accessed online, and those that are not. Access dates (T 15.4.1.5) are no longer required for sources that list a date of publication; they are required for sources that omit a publication date.

Parenthetical Citation

As noted above, parenthetical citation is required for biblical references, but according to Turabian 16.4.3, it is also allowed “if you are discussing a particular work at length and need to cite it frequently.”

Abbreviations within Footnotes

Turabian 17.2.3 prohibits abbreviated titles for journals. However, such abbreviations are common in biblical and theological studies, and abbreviated titles are permitted (not required) at DTS. Abbreviated titles must be included in a list of abbreviations, however, and the full title must be included in the bibliography. A list of standard abbreviations for biblical and theological studies can be found in The SBL Handbook of Style, 2nd ed. (Atlanta: SBL Press, 2014).

Special Types of References

The examples provided below are constructed from the principles given in chapters 15-17 of Turabian. The list is not exhaustive but is included to illustrate special types of references that are frequently encountered in biblical and theological studies.

For each reference the footnote is denoted by “N” and its corresponding bibliographic entry by “B.”

Article Citations

Contrary to the example provided in Turabian 17.2.4, it is not necessary to include a month or season when citing a journal article; issue numbers may be included for journals that are paginated consecutively through the issues of a volume.

Greek and Hebrew Words from Lexica

References concerning Greek and Hebrew words from lexica such as BDB, BDAG, TDOT and TDNT are special cases and should be treated as the examples below.

If the article is unsigned, begin the citation with the editor’s name, followed by the bibliographic information and the page reference.

Abbreviated titles are allowed as long as the full title is included in a list of abbreviations. According to that option, the previous note would be:

BDAG, 576-79.

The bibliographic entry should refer only to the work as a whole and not the specific entry, and the title should not be abbreviated.

If the article is signed, begin the citation with the author’s name, followed by the word to be defined in quotation marks, the bibliographic information, and the page reference.

For the abbreviated note:

Bornkamm, “πρέσβυς, κτλ.,” in TDNT, 6:952.

The bibliographic entry should begin with the author’s name and include the page range of the article:

Classical, Patristic and Medieval Works

Classical, Patristic and Medieval works should be included in both the footnotes and the bibliography (Turabian 17.8.1). Turabian allows this option for fields that involve textual analysis, such as biblical and theological studies. See the footnote examples below and in Turabian 17.8.1 for these types of works. The bibliographic entries should be treated as edited and translated works, as prescribed by Turabian 17.1.1.1.

Examples:

N: 1 Clement 34.8.

N: Josephus Against Apion 1.1.

N: Augustine On the Trinity 1.10.20.

Theological Encyclopedias and Dictionaries

Entries from theological encyclopedias and dictionaries should be treated as chapters and other titled parts of a book, as in Turabian 17.1.8, and not as well-known reference works (Turabian 17.5.3). See the following examples:

Class Notes

For distributed class notes, follow the example below:

N: John D. Hannah, “Church in the Modern Era: Europe and America,” unpublished class notes for HT 102 (Dallas Theological Seminary, Fall Semester, 2007), 25.

Complex Citation Examples

Part cited out of a multi-volume, edited work:

Reference that includes full series information:

Sources Accessed Online

If a reasonably short, stable URL with non-restricted access is available, use it, as in this example from JSTOR.

If a reasonably short, stable URL is not available, or if the URL is restricted to authorized users, then use the name of the database from which the book or article was accessed.

Book that has no fixed page numbers (See T 17.1.10 for general principles)

In this example the cited essay, “Staying Centered and Purpose Driven,” is the third chapter of the book, while the cited text is found under the heading, “The Challenge of Change.” The chapter number and section title are given instead of the page number.

Bibliography

Bibliographic entries should be arranged alphabetically by surname and by title if the author has more than one title (Turabian 16.2.2). To aid in computer-assisted additions or corrections, the author’s name should be used for second and subsequent references to the same author with multiple works, contrary to Turabian 16.2.2. Do not use the 3-em dash.
Bibliographies for research papers may be listed in alphabetical order without subdivisions. For large bibliographies in theses and dissertations, consult with your advisor as to the best division. Head notes should clearly identify each subdivision. Within the divisions, works should be listed by alphabetical order by surname and alphabetically by title when more than one work is listed for an author.

Preparation of the Document

Capitalization and Spelling

Capitalization and spelling should conform to the glossary on p. 14 of this supplement. For example, note the differences between Scripture, Bible, Messiah, etc., and scriptural, biblical, messianic, etc.

En Dashes in Numeric Ranges

Turabian 21.7 covers use of hyphens (-) and em dashes (—). Turabian briefly mentions en dashes (--) in footnote 1, page 314. Turabian 23.2.4 covers use of hyphens for numeric ranges (such as a range of dates or pages or verses). Amend Turabian as follows. Use an en dash between continued numbers to indicate a range, such as 1984–2020. Note this is contrary to Turabian 23.2.4 which specifies a hyphen, not an en dash. CMS, on which Turabian is based, specifies an en dash (CMS 6.78–80).

Punctuation of Bible Passages

When citing Bible passages, use commas between references to the same level, and a semicolon between separate references, e.g., Gen 1:26–27, 30; 2:18–23. Use an en dash between continued numbers to indicate a range of verses or chapters. See Turabian 24.6 for additional details.

Creating Color Charts and Graphs

When you have multiple series of data points in a chart or graph, it is often helpful to use color to distinguish the series. However, because some people are color blind, and because color graphics may be reproduced in black-and-white, it is wise to also distinguish the series by markers. For example, one series could be a dashed line, another series could include triangle data points, etc.
PDF Version of Final Version

Save your document as a PDF type “A” (for archival) file, so that fonts, Greek/Hebrew texts, symbols, paragraphs styles, character styles, pages, etc. are embedded. This PDF becomes the official copy for grading and for archiving in the library.

Hints and Tips on Style

1. References to other parts of the thesis or dissertation should use numerals, e.g., “In chapter 5 of this thesis . . .” (Turabian 23.1.8).

2. Excessive use of the first person singular and plural pronouns should be avoided.

3. When referring to the terminus of dates, the following form should be used: “from 1969 to 1970” not “from 1969-70.” But reference to inclusive dates should take the form, “in the years 1969-70.”

4. When referring to the era, AD precedes the date and BC follows it (Turabian 23.3.2), e.g., “In AD 400 . . .” but “In 841 BC . . .”

5. If it is necessary to divide a Hebrew phrase, clause, or sentence between lines, the words should be divided so that they read right to left in their normal order in the two lines.

6. Periods and commas should go inside quotation marks and semicolons and colons should follow them. Question marks and exclamation points precede them if they belong to the quotation but follow them if they belong to the sentence of which the quotation is a part (Turabian 21.12.2.1).

7. The closing quotation mark should precede the parenthetical reference and the period should follow, e.g., “. . . met him” (Heb 7:10).

8. Leave one space after all punctuation including periods, question marks, and exclamation points.

9. Arabic numerals should be used in referring to the names of the biblical books, not Roman numerals, e.g., “1 Pet” not “I Pet.”

ABSTRACT

THE ARTICLE WITH MULTIPLE SUBSTANTIves CONNECTED BY KAI’ IN THE NEW TESTAMENT: SEMANTICS AND SIGNIFICANCE

Daniel Baird Wallace

Readers: Buist M. Fanning, W. Hall Harris, Richard A. Taylor

The thesis of this dissertation is that the semantics of the article-substantive-καί-substantive construction (TSKS) have been largely misunderstood. This misunderstanding has adversely impacted the exegesis of several theologically significant texts. The body of the dissertation is divided into three parts: historical investigation, linguistic-phenomenological analysis of the construction, and exegetical implications. That is to say, the reasons for the misunderstanding are traced historically; a better comprehension of the semantics of the construction is established by an examination of primary literature in the light of linguistic theory; and the implications of this analysis are applied to a number of passages in the New Testament.

Historically, our treatment begins with a clear grammatical principle articulated by Granville Sharp, and ends with the present-day confusion. In 1798 Sharp published a monograph in which he articulated a rule of Greek grammar, to the effect that in TSKS, when the substantives were singular, personal, and other than proper names, both had the same referent. He applied this to christologically significant passages such as Titus 2:13 and 2 Peter 1:1. But Sharp's canon has been frequently misunderstood, and consequently, assumed to be invalid.

An examination of the New Testament data and other ancient Greek literature revealed that Sharp's rule has a general validity in the language. All so-called exceptions seemed to be more apparent than real, and can be accounted for on linguistic principle. Further, the various permutations of TSKS displayed different, but nevertheless relatively coherent, patterns of meaning. Plural personal constructions rarely involved identical referents, except with participles; plural nouns were typically referentially discrete, but several examples involved some sort of overlap. Impersonal constructions only rarely suggested identity of referent; they routinely implied distinct or overlapping entities.

A number of exegetically significant texts are affected by the linguistic-phenomenological investigation. In particular, there is a strong antecedent probability that the constructions in Matthew 24:3, Ephesians 2:20, 4:11, and 2 Thessalonians 2:1 probably do not imply identity, while the constructions in Titus 2:13 and 2 Peter 1:1 most likely do.

Normal text. Double spaced, 3/4" indent. Chapter style used with appropriate header gives a 2" drop for section first pages. You can use Chapter style with the paper title or with routine paper headings to begin the paper (Introduction, Conclusion etc.). A thesis requires chapter name and number at the beginning of each new chapter. A thesis also requires a 1.5 inch left margin throughout to compensate for binding.

1st Level Subheading

1st and 2nd level sub-heading are started on the 3rd line after the preceding text (double space plus one line). Headline style capitalization, no period to end. Normal text begins on 2nd line after the heading. (This is really too short for a block quote!).

2nd Level Subheading

3rd Level Subheading

Turabian suggests a run-in paragraph sub-heading with a period. However, MS Word formats according to paragraph breaks, and so the entire paragraph becomes styled as that heading.

Footnotes should be formatted so there is one line of space before each note.
